WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MORGAN ROUSSEAU, MANAGING EDITOR

The annual St. Patrick's Day parade went off without a hitch in Southie yesterday, despite a shortened parade route and piles of leftover snow on the ground. Metro was there to snap photos of the festivities, which were enjoyed by about one million green-clad spectators. Speaking of green, today we have a story on a product your chapped lips never knew you needed — marijuana lip balm. Read more inside on page 6, and visit metro.boston.us for more local coverage.

MASS AG PROBES FACEBOOK OVER DATA MISUSE

In the Massachusetts attorney general said over the weekend that her office was launching an investigation after reports that Cambridge Analytica had harvested private information from more than 50 million Facebook users in developing techniques to support President Donald Trump's 2016 election campaign. "Massachusetts residents deserve answers immediately from Facebook and Cambridge Analytica. We are launching an investigation," Maura Healey said on Twitter in a post that linked to a New York Times report on the issue. Facebook said on Sunday it was conducting a "comprehensive internal and external review." In a statement from Paul Grewal, a Facebook vice president, the company said it was committed to "vigorously enforcing our policies to protect people's information." For more, see page 9.

REPUBLICANS TO TRUMP: LET MUELLER DO HIS JOB

2 GOP senators warned President Donald Trump on Sunday not to fire special counsel Robert Mueller, and said the president must let federal investigators looking into Russian meddling in the U.S. election do their jobs. The president renewed his Twitter attacks on the FBI and Mueller's probe since the firing on Friday of the bureau's former deputy director, Andrew McCabe, two days before he was eligible to retire with a full pension. Republican Sen. Jeff Flake, who has criticized Trump, said the president's comments appeared to be aimed at Mueller. Sen. Lindsey Graham said if Trump were to dismiss Mueller it would mark "the beginning of the end of his presidency." AshLee Strong, a spokeswoman for House Speaker Paul Ryan, said: "As the speaker has always said, Mr. Mueller and his team should be able to do their job."

PUTIN WINS ANOTHER SIX YEARS AT RUSSIA'S HELM

4 Russian President Vladimir Putin won a landslide re-election victory on Sunday, extending his rule over the world's largest country for another six years at a time when his ties with the West are on a hostile trajectory. Putin's victory will extend his total time in office to nearly a quarter of a century, until 2024, by which time he will be 71. Only Soviet dictator Josef Stalin ruled for longer. Putin has promised to use his new term to beef up Russia's defenses against the West and to raise living standards. In a widely expected outcome, an exit poll by pollster VTsIOM showed Putin, who has dominated the political landscape for the last 18 years, had won 73.9 percent of the vote. His nearest challenger, Communist Party candidate Pavel Grudinin, got just over 11 percent, according to exit polls.

CONGRESS AIMS TO END SHUTDOWN SQUABBLES

5 Congress, facing yet another government shutdown deadline at midnight on Friday this week, will try to approve a massive spending bill that would end lawmakers' nettlesome budget infighting, at least through Sept. 30. Republican leaders in the House hope to soon unveil the product of long negotiations over a $1 trillion spending bill. It would fund all of the federal government's activities, except for the gigantic "mandatory entitlement" programs such as Social Security and Medicare, which do not have to be renewed annually. The Congress was supposed to have completed this work by Sept. 30, 2017, but it has not done that. Instead, the government has been running on a series of short-term, stopgap funding measures. As of Sunday, negotiators were still trying to put the finishing touches on the longer-term bill.

St. Paddy's Parade paints Southie green

As many as one million revelers celebrated the 2018 St. Patrick's Day Parade in South Boston on Sunday.

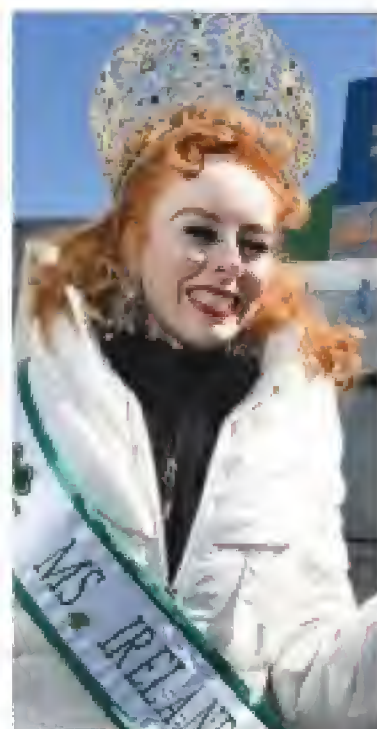

MORGAN ROUSSEAU
morgan@metro.us

On Sunday, South Boston came alive with the sound of bagpipes and the buzz of a jubilant crowd as the annual St. Patrick's Day Parade marked the Irish holiday.

Up to one million spectators were estimated to attend Sunday's parade, which happened a day after St. Patrick's Day.

This year's route was shortened due to concern over massive amounts of uncleared snow on the ground after last week's blizzard. The new 1.8-mile route was about half the length of the original 3.2-mile route.

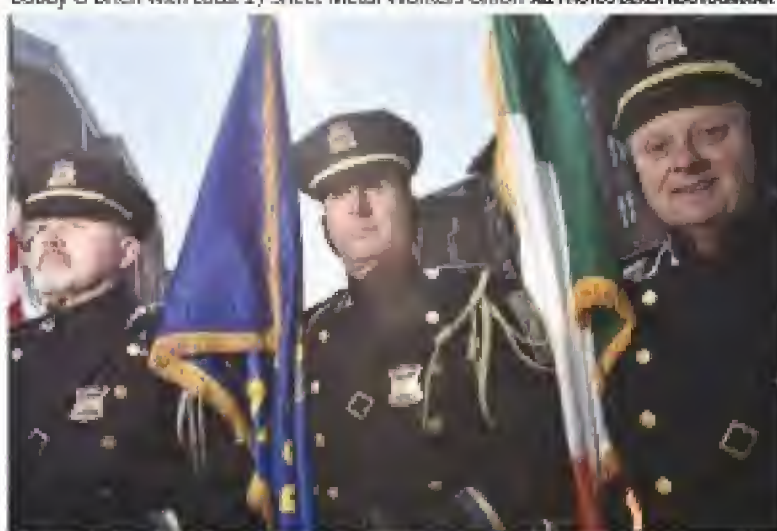

More than 100 groups and thousands of marchers participated in Sunday's event, according to organizers. The parade included about 75 floats and saw performances from 35 bands. The annual parade has been a tradition in Southie, where Irish immigrants settled in the early 1800s, since 1901.

Massachusetts pot dispensary creates new THC lip balm

This is just another advancement in the world of "marijuana as medicine," said Ermont Director of Operations Seth Yaffe.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Cannabis connoisseurs are doing more with marijuana than ever, creating all sorts of edibles, tinctures and topicals. Now, a Massachusetts dispensary has developed a THC-infused lip balm.

Ermont Inc., a medical marijuana dispensary in Quincy and the mastermind behind the marijuana-infused frozen pizza, recently unveiled its latest creation: a medicated lip balm made with coconut oil, beeswax, shea butter, eucalyptus and lemon oil and 5 milligrams of THC.

"Rather than smoking something or eating an edible, the aspect of using a topical is something we've been pushing the boundaries on," said Seth Yaffe, director of operations at Ermont.

"We came up with the idea [because] it's cold, a lot of people are going skiing or snowboarding, and there's a lot of chapped lips," he said. "And we wanted to do an extremely low-dosage topical so that people can use it throughout the day."

Tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC, is just one chemical (or cannabinoid) within the cannabis plant. THC is the highest psychoactive found in cannabis, Yaffe said, but the low dose in this lip balm wouldn't bring on any psychoactive effects.

Instead, it will help with anxiety, pain relief, inflammation, healing wounds and dryness, he said.

"People can carry it around and not worry about overmedicating or being zoned out, if they usually feel that way from THC," he added. Plus, for those want to be a bit more discreet in their medical marijuana usage, lip balm is an easy answer.

Future versions of this product will also include cannabis terpenes — basically the essential oils of the cannabis plant that give a specific strain its smell, taste and particular effects.

By adding those in,

Ermont can make "strain-specific lip balms," Yaffe said.

Yaffe believes Ermont is the first dispensary in Massachusetts to develop THC lip balm, and even he's a bit surprised by the advancement. To him, it shows a burgeoning industry that is constantly making advancements, which are really changing things for those who use marijuana as medicine.

"For us, the most important thing is the relationship we have with our patients. Sometimes we see 200 to 400 patients a day," he said. "We try to elicit a lot of feedback and get a better idea of what people are looking for, how to consume cannabis throughout the course of their life that makes it easier and less clinical."

"Instead of popping a pill or drinking an elixir or something like that," he added, "we're able to really figure out different ways our body can consume natural medicine."

Licensing looms as next step toward legal marijuana

Next month, Mass. regulators will start taking applications for commercial pot businesses.

With less than a month until it is required by law to begin accepting applications for legal marijuana businesses, the Cannabis Control Commission on (CCC) Thursday approved the process and timeline it will use to review and process licenses.

"We are on track and we are capable of accepting applications for April 1, the technology will be there to support that endeavor," Executive Director Shawn Collins said, adding that the statutory deadline of April 1 falls on Easter Sunday.

"The first step in the application process is to certify those priority applicants ... and that will begin in earnest on April 2."

From April 2 until April 16, the CCC will allow prospective businesses to apply to be part of the commission's priority certification process, which is open to registered marijuana dispensaries (RMDs) and those eligible to apply through the CCC's economic empowerment program. Those approved for priority certification will then be able to submit their marijuana license application beginning April 16.

May 1 will be the first day the CCC accepts applications for cultivators, craft marijuana cooperatives, microbusinesses and independent testing labs. Marijuana retailers, product manufacturers and transporters will be able to apply for licenses beginning June 1, the CCC said.

The decision made Thursday "balances the significant progress we have made over six months with our responsibility to launch an efficient, orderly, and thorough application process in April," Collins said.

"Our approach supports the unknown number of applicants who will be utilizing our licensing system for the first time, and staff who will be charged with certifying that establishments and agents are qualified to serve residents throughout Massachusetts," he said. "This choice will help ensure the process moves smoothly, which is in the best interests of the industry and the commonwealth."

US top court mulls free speech fight over 'crisis pregnancy centers'

The Pregnancy Care Clinic in the Southern California city of El Cajon offers a host of services for pregnant women including ultrasound exams, prenatal vitamins and maternity clothes. There is one major exception: abortion.

Now the clinic, which staunchly opposes abortion, is among of a group of Christian-based facilities, known as crisis pregnancy centers, involved in a major case that goes before the U.S. Supreme Court on Tuesday.

They are challenging a California law that forces centers that are licensed as family planning facilities to post notices that the state has programs offering free or low-cost birth control and abortion services, a requirement they argue violates their free speech rights under the U.S. Constitution's First Amendment.

The law requires unlicensed facilities with no medical provider on staff to disclose that fact.

"They're forcing us to use our walls as a billboard to promote abortion," Pregnancy Care Clinic Executive Director Josh McClure said in an interview.

California said in legal papers some of these centers try to prevent women from accessing abortions by using incomplete or false medical advice. Some try to resemble medical clinics down to lab coats worn by staff, giving the impression they offer abortion services while employing no actual medical professionals, California said.

The centers say they offer legitimate services and that their mission is to persuade women to forego abortion.

The case is one of several the Supreme Court is tackling during its current term in which conservative legal groups are invoking the First Amendment and asserting that governments are unconstitutionally compelling people to say or do things they oppose. REUTERS

GOP lawmakers concerned by Facebook privacy breach

Several Republican lawmakers expressed concern over privacy violations on Sunday after media reports that a political consultancy that worked on President Donald Trump's campaign gained inappropriate access to 50 million Facebook users' data.

Republican Sen. Marco Rubio said he believed some internet companies have grown too fast to digest their responsibilities and obligations.

"So we'll learn more about this in the days to come. But yeah I'm disturbed by that," Rubio told NBC's "Meet the Press."

Sen. Rand Paul was asked whether people can trust companies like Facebook in the wake of the report about Cambridge Analytica taking data.

"People have to look into it. Whether or not it broke the law, absolutely, the privacy of the American consumer, the American individual, should be protected," Paul said on CNN.

Facebook disclosed the issue in a blog post on Friday, hours before media reports that conservative-leaning Cambridge Analytica, a data company known for its work on Trump's 2016 presidential campaign, was given access to the data and may not have deleted it.

Facebook said in a statement that a Cambridge University psychology professor had lied to the company and violated its policies by passing data to Cambridge Analytica from an app he had developed. It suspended the firm from Facebook.

Facebook did not immediately reply when asked on Sunday for a response to the lawmakers' comments. However, in a new statement Sunday, the company said it was conducting a "comprehensive internal and external review" to determine if the user data in question still existed.

Cambridge Analytica and the professor have denied violating Facebook's terms, according to media reports.

The scrutiny presented a new threat to Facebook's reputation, which was already under attack over Russians' use of Facebook tools to sway American voters before and after the 2016 U.S. elections.

"This is a big deal, when you have that amount of data, and the privacy violations there are significant."

Republican Sen. Jeff Flake

Republican Sen. Jeff Flake said he had a lot of questions about the data taken from Facebook, including who knew it had been taken and whether it is still being used.

"This is a big deal, when you have that amount of data, and the privacy violations there are significant," he told CNN's "State of the Union" program. "So the question is who knew it and when did they know it, how long did this go on and what happens to that data now?"

Facebook faced new calls for regulation from Democratic senators on Saturday and was hit with questions about personal data safeguards, but it was unclear whether the Congress would act.

Rep. Adam Schiff, the top Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, said more investigation was needed.

"We need to find out what we can about the misappropriation of the privacy, the private information of tens of millions of Americans," he said on ABC's "This Week."

Also on ABC, Sen. James Lankford, a Republican, said it was not known whether the incident was connected to the Trump campaign. SENTERS

Does stress really cause gray hair?

It's not such a black-and-white issue.

MEAGAN MORRIS
letters@metro.us

Take a look at photos of a president — any president — at the beginning and the end of his term. What do you notice?

They all look a whole lot older at the end of their service, with new wrinkles and plenty of grays.

Part of that is because of aging four to eight years, but we assume a lot of it comes from carrying the weight of the world on their shoulders.

But is that actually the case?

Most men start seeing grays pop up around 30; most women, around 35. Genetics certainly plays a part; some people going salt-and-pepper as young as high school, while others never see a white hair.

The graying process starts deep inside the hair follicle — all 100,000-plus of them. Epidermal cells called keratinocytes stack up, eventually dying and leaving keratin behind.

Keratin is colorless, but gives hair (and skin and nails) texture and strength.

As hair grows, another group of cells, melanocytes, create melanin that comes in two colors — dark brown/black (eumelanin) and yellow/red (pheomelanin) — and combines to create hair color.

Gray hair doesn't have that melanin, so when a hair goes from an active growth phase to a resting phase, it falls out before the process restarts.

But because keratinocytes live longer than melanocytes, the hair still grows, but without the pigment it had before.

So now you're stressing out

Stress hormones might affect melanocytes, dermatologist Jennifer Lin told Scientific American.

"There is evidence that local expression of stress hormones mediate the signals, instructing melanocytes to deliver melanin to keratinocytes," she told the magazine.

"Conceivably, if that signal is disrupted, melanin will not deliver pigment to your hair."

"There's been debate over the relationship between the lack of vitamin B [and the presence of gray hair], and low vitamin B can be influenced by stress," Sandra Gilman, a trichologist (a doctor who specializes in diagnosis and treatment of disorders of human hair and scalp) and educational director for The Elan Center for Trichology, told The Huffington Post.

This is getting traumatic

Another thing that can affect the growth of grays: disruption due to trauma, surgery and nutritional deficiencies.

"As the hair grows out of the follicle, various processes take place in a timely fashion to produce a shaft of hair with the correct color [genetically speaking]," Gilman said.

"One of these processes involves the melanin-producing cells that are present and whose job it is to provide color to the hair during the hair-growth cycle."

"During this cycle, anything that interrupts the flow of events can cause the nonpigmentation of the hair shaft."

It's not certain that stress can cause gray hair, but it is certain that gray hair depends on genetics — and everyone's different.

Perception also plays a part — we notice presidents and celebrities aging because they're in the public eye.

So, yeah, they are just like us!

Who exactly was 'Arthur Miller: Writer'?

His daughter Rebecca reveals all in a new documentary, airing tonight on HBO.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Arthur Miller is one of the greatest playwrights of the 20th century. But according to his daughter, Rebecca Miller, there was a side to the writer of "Death Of A Salesman," "The Crucible" and "A View From the Bridge" that the public never saw.

That's exactly what she wants to present to the world with her HBO documentary "Arthur Miller: Writer." Metro recently spoke with Miller and discussed her legendary father.

When did you start filming your dad?

I originally was [just] shooting randomly. Then in about 1995 I decided to make it into a film. I wanted to get my father as he was. I knew that no one else could get that close to my father. I just felt that he was so different in his public persona in interviews than the man I knew.

Arthur Miller wrote "The Crucible" and "The Death Of A Salesman" ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

I was harvesting scenes and information and stories he told that I loved. My first impulse was to capture his personality, and then it became about doing something more serious.

How was he different?

He was much more guarded. And a little bit defensive. He was just very dour [compared] to the person I knew. He would make occasional jokes on camera, but he was always very funny and aloof, and very unjudgmental. None of those things seemed to come through, and I wanted to show him in that different way.

Did your dad talk about his past successes as a playwright, or focus on the future?

He was certainly happy that he had written his past plays, but he was writing for the future. And he was writing like a younger man in some ways. His later work is very free and experimental — not that his first plays weren't. But it was tough because he was up against himself.

Your dad died in 2005. Did you need this time, emotionally, before you could return to the material?
I left it for years and then I went back to it when it felt like it was a boil on my back that I really had to lance off. I needed some perspective. I couldn't have finished this film when he was alive. It would have been too early, and I just wouldn't have been free.

What was something that you learned about your dad in this process?

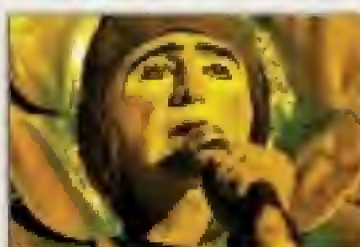

When you do something like this with your parents, you see different elements to their personality. I saw more vulnerability and how wide open he was, and even his romance, all of which I never saw.

I also saw a tremendous amount of self-confidence that he had. By the end of his life he was much humbler. He was still fascinated and very much in love with human beings. But there's not that sense that he has to teach them — he's just bemused them.

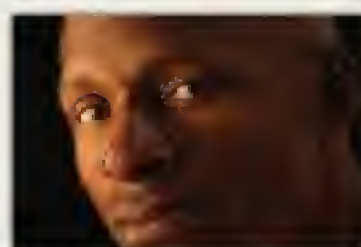

"Arthur Miller: Writer" will air on HBO on Monday, March 19 at 8 p.m.

Traditionalists tend to opt for American, cheddar or Swiss. 75% of chefs surveyed say cheese goes directly under the hamburger patty.

SAUCE

Try making your own: Fry two garlic cloves in a little oil, add tomato paste and a little water. Reduce the sauce for a few minutes and add 1/2 tablespoon of paprika, 1 tablespoon of sugar, 2 tablespoons of apple cider vinegar and salt and pepper to taste. Take that, Heinz!

BREAD

Rookie mistake? Grabbing straight from the bun bag. Lightly butter and toast the inner-facing sides of the bread.

HAMBURGUER

Use ground meat that's 80% to 20% when it comes to fat content. You might feel better ordering the leaner stuff, but this is a cheat-day sort of sandwich. Any leaner and you'll be stuck with a dry bit of 'burg.

PREPARATION METHOD

Mush your meat well (a bit of soybean oil can help), and mold a ball the size of your palm.

Place it on the grill (or in an iron pan) and smash with your spatula. Add a pinch of salt, and cook for two minutes.

Flip the burger, and wait two minutes for medium. Don't flip it again — one and (well?) done.

Add your queso as soon as you've made your flip. Insider tip? Spritz with a little bit of water and watch your cheese bubble.

Ready! Condiment time will be dictated by both personal preference as well as your choice of cheese (strong cheeses mean fewer add-ons).

"Smash!" signs George Motz when autographing his book. Considered one of the biggest hamburger experts in the world by The New York Times, he is the author of "The Great American Burger Book: How to Make Authentic Regional Hamburgers at Home."

The "king of hamburgers" is an advocate of the traditional recipe and claims to have eaten more than 10,000 of them for his book's research.

Motz's preparation is fast and takes on the "less is more" style.

"The hamburger should fit in your hand and be easy to bite into. If you need cutlery to eat it, it's not a hamburger," says Motz.

Contentious! No seasoning? No mention of bacon or BBQ sauce, let alone aioli? Motz insists that the purest version is the sandwich at its prime.

That said, in his book Motz gets into every region's signature sandwich. He includes recipes specific to almost every state, so you'll be able to cater to the most specific, die-hard out-of-towner.

And even if you aren't catering for a crowd, "The Great American Burger Book" makes for an interesting read, if only to learn the subtle differences between burgers of the Northeast. VANESSA SELICANI MWN

Find the right job-search site for you

Save time — and your sanity — by scouring online hubs that specialize in your field.

Big job-search sites seem like a natural place to turn when looking for work. But often it feels like you're sending your résumé into the void end-less void — or, more likely, an HR director's overflowing inbox, along with hundreds (sometimes thousands) of others.

While go-to's like LinkedIn, Indeed and Craigslist can yield the occasional lead, sometimes narrowing your searches to more specific sites is the best approach. It only stands to reason that a bartender and a banker would look for work in different places.

So stop wasting everyone's time — especially your own — and do some thinking before you search.

The service industry

While the best approach to finding bar or restaurant work is always going to be to meet the manager in person. But it's unreal-

It makes sense that if one job's best done in flip-flops and another requires heavy boots you'll find them in different places. ALL IMAGES ISTOCK istic to think you can stop by dozens of places all over town in one day.

PoachedJobs narrows searches to the very position you're after — a potential line cook is not potential waitstaff, and a head chef's got to look to a different place than, say, a beverage-sales rep.

Freelance writing

Getting that first "in" is really the hardest step. Building your portfolio of writing samples is key to landing a stable full-time or part-time position at a name publication or website.

That's where sites like ProBlogger and TheWriteLife come in. Most postings are for one-off pieces, but many publications offer part-time write-for-cash gigs that can last months. And in the constantly shifting journalism world, sometimes that's the best you can ask for.

You might also consider a creative staffing agency's listings. Big ones like CreativeCircle have listings all over the country for design types and tech heads in addition to writers and editors.

Handiwork

If building things and handiwork are skills you've got in your tool belt, searching for such positions on Craigslist is probably the bane of your existence. Those jobs can get you cash ty much find any niche position in engineering or industrial work.

Another alternative to Craigslist, though still primarily good for one-offs, is to build up a profile and client base on Handy and TaskRabbit. Create a profile that's specific to what you want to do, take on a few jobs for less money than you'd like at first, and then as you build a set of stellar reviews you can raise your hourly rate. Some Rabbits make a full-time salary building Ikea furniture, doing meal prep for carb-counters and any number of other chores. What starts as money on the side can turn into 40 hours a week — if you want it to.

Get out there!

When things are getting stale in your life and the last thing you want to do is go to another dead-end interview, don't be afraid to really shake things up and look outside your comfort zone — way outside.

Some people have that one friend who spent a couple years gallivanting around the world, working obscure jobs along the way, not worrying at all about where they'd land next (let alone when the next nor'easter will hit). "That could never be me," you think in response, as you hate-tap your way through their Instagram feed.

GreenheartTravel is a job search site that helps you find teaching and volunteer work in different countries.

Whether it means being a summer camp counselor in Italy, teaching English in Colombia or getting a marketing internship in Thailand — Greenheart's like the travel agent connecting you with your dream working vacation.

B's look like beasts of the East

The Bruins are now just two points behind Tampa Bay in the standings.

RICH SLATE
sports@metro.us

On Sunday in Boston, there was plenty more for the Bruins (45-17-8) to celebrate other than St. Patrick's Day and captain Zdeno Chara's 41st birthday.

The night before in Tampa Bay, in the final tilt of a weeklong four-game road trip, the B's turned in their best win of the season - a 3-0 shutout of the Lightning (48-19-4), who are the top team in the Eastern Conference. Boston improved to 2-0 this season vs. Tampa Bay and with two meetings left in the regular season the Bruins have a good chance to both leapfrog the Lightning in the Atlantic Division and also take over the No. 1 seed in the East. The B's are now only two points behind the Lightning with a game in hand so this is more than a pipe dream. It is a reality for a team that has shown more resiliency than a horror movie villain all season-long.

"I don't think we could have classified this as a measuring stick game," said Bruins head coach Bruce Cassidy. "When you're playing down as many men as we were that are important guys, we were looking at it as more of a bounce-back game against a real good team."

Along with goaltender Tuukka Rask (23 saves), who picked up his third shutout of the season, and a strong defensive effort — Boston's special teams had a performance to remember as they scored two power play goals and held Tampa Bay's No. 2 ranked power play 0-for-3.

In such a charmed campaign for the B's, veteran forward David Backes could use some of the good fortune that's been enjoyed by most of his teammates. Between a bizarre illness at the start of the season, a bogus suspension last week and a fluke injury suffered against Tampa Bay, he deserves some more normalcy in his professional life. He actually scored a power play goal in the first period that gave Boston a 2-0 advantage but late in the frame, he was cut by a skate blade behind his right knee. That laceration forced him out of the game as he required a few stitches to close the wound. As bad as it initially looked, it could have been much worse.

With 30 goals and 43 assists, Bruins forward Brad Marchand has a team-leading 73 points so far this season. Marchand is 16th in the NHL in total points. He registered an assist in the big win over the Lightning Saturday night.

"It looks like he'll be ok and then from there I don't know, I don't have an update," noted Cassidy about Backes. "We'll see how it is [Sunday]. We'll classify him as day-to-day but other than that, I don't know if he'll be ready for Monday [when the Bruins host Columbus at TD Garden]."

Defenseman Torey Krug (13 goals, 38 assists) is one of the numerous Bruins that has stepped up in Chara and Charlie McAvoy's (7 goals, 25 assists, plus-32) recent absences. He assisted on all three goals for the Bruins on Saturday and was named the No. 2 star of the game as he logged nearly 20 minutes of ice time (19:37). Rask (30-11-4, 2.29 goals against average, .919 save percentage) hasn't been at his best in the last few weeks, but the record shows that the Bruins have won in each of his last six starts, and that's all that really matters.

SUH ME

ALL PHOTOS: GETTY IMAGES

The Pats have already traded for Browns defensive tackle Danny Shelton and signed former Falcons D-end Adrian Clayborn last Friday. Adding Ndamukong Suh would be the very nasty cherry on top of this defensive line sundae. The question now is — how realistic is signing Suh?

Suh visited the Saints on Saturday, and has a meeting set up with the Tennessee Titans this week as well. The former Dolphins and Lions star is "taking his time to evaluate his plethora of options with his family," according to Yahoo Sports' Jordan Schultz. The Seahawks are also said to be strongly interested in landing Suh in free agency.

The Patriots are not a team to engage in a bidding war, particularly when it comes to a big name like Suh and the type of money he will command. But the Patriots are hopeful that if they are in the ballpark of the other teams, that Suh will choose them based on their winning reputation.

That may be wishful thinking on New England's part, based on reports that Suh is first and foremost concerned about money and will go to the top bidder.

At the same time, Suh will find it difficult to get a whopper of a deal considering there have been plenty of other good defensive tackles on the market this offseason — many of which have already signed with other teams (Muhammad Wilkerson, Sheldon Richardson, Star Lotulelei, Dontari Poe).

STRAIGHT CASH FOR BIG BABY

Former Celtics favorite Glen "Big Baby" Davis was arrested in February as police discovered a quarter-pound of weed and nearly $92,000 in cash in his hotel room. Davis was said to have been smoking the ganja in Aberdeen, Maryland, and the hotel owner was none too pleased. He knocked on Big Baby's door, and then Big Baby told the owner to "F— off."

The owner called police and they entered

Big Baby's room, finding the loot. Big Baby issued a humorous response to the situation in a video while flying in a private jet and eating a giant box of Popeye's fried chicken.

"This is your boy Big Baby, man. Don't believe all of that s— on the internet," he said while ripping a townie (eating the meat off a drumstick in one motion). "I will have my day in court. They just mad cause a black man got money, man. Tryin' to keep a black man down, man. My s— legal, man. A whole lotta jump shots!"

HOLY BLEEP

Nothing in sports is sacred anymore.

For that, I feel for the sports-watching youth of America.

Don't get me wrong. UMBC's monumental upset over Virginia last Friday night — the first time a No. 16 seed has ever beaten a No. 1 seed in the NCAA men's basketball tournament — was awesome. But, what is there left?

Sports are awesome based on their unpredictability and "anything can happen" nature. But in the past 15 years we have seen the Red Sox win the World Series, the Cubs win the World Series, a team from Cleveland win it all (2016 Cavaliers), the Eagles win the Super Bowl and a friggin' 16 seed beating a No. 1 seed.

No more Holy Grails.

I'm going to Vegas right now and laying money on the Browns to win a Lombardi in the next five years ... scratch that, Detroit Lions. ... At least we can still count on the Browns.

Aries Making a financial gain or negotiating a deal is featured. Step up and wheel and deal. If you leave this task to someone else, you won't do as well.

Taurus Share your feelings with someone you love and respect. A joint effort will help you hash out all your problems, and although it won't be easy, the results will be worthwhile.

Gemini A legal or financial dispute should be handled carefully. Anger is never a good way to deal with controversy if you want to move forward. Look for an appropriate solution.

Cancer Get involved in projects that will help you advance. Revamping your resume or exploring new ways to use your skills will encourage you to take on a new position.

Leo Discuss what you want to see happen and get the go-ahead. If you are open to suggestions, it will help you bring about changes that will encourage saving.

Virgo You may have a good plan, but don't expect things to run smoothly when it comes to settlements, joint finances or issues that affect your health. Have a good excuse ready.

Libra You'll be drawn to someone who requires assistance. What you get in return will be a lesson or experience that will serve you well when you deal with future relationships.

Scorpio Old habits are hard to break. Look at the mistakes you've made and the people who have been bad influences or have taken advantage of you, and alter your course.

Sagittarius Someone close to you will take advantage of your generosity and good nature. Offer nothing more than affection. Make positive personal changes.

Capricorn Getting together with an old friend will do you good and give you something to think about. Be proud of your accomplishments instead of envying others.

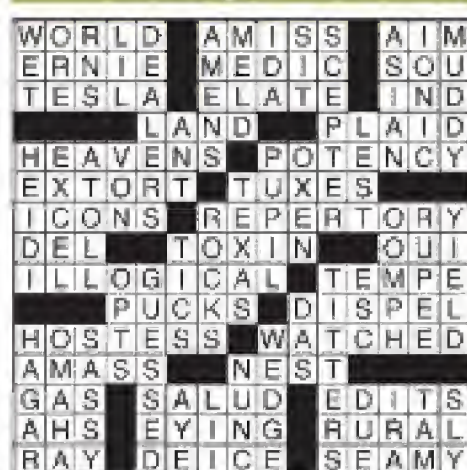

Aquarius Take up a creative hobby or show a greater interest in different cultures, lifestyles or beliefs. What you learn will encourage you to improve your own life.

Pisces Getting angry will not help solve a problem. Address matters head-on, and if you must step down or make a move, you'll end up further ahead when you do so. EUGENIA LAST
